HYPOTHERMIA SYMPTOMS

Confusion

Shivering

Difficulty speaking

Sleepiness

Stiff muscles

If you or anyone has these symptoms, call 911

If the person won't go to the hospital: Get them inside to a warm place as soon as possible. Take off any wet clothes (because wet skin loses heat 25 faster than dry skin). Cover them in warm blankets. Put hand warmers under the blankets with them and cover them in an emergency blanket.

All about Frostbite

What is frostbite: When the water in your skin slowly freezes into ice crystals, killing your skin and muscles which makes them hard and black

Most common on: fingers, toes, ears, cheeks, and noses

Frostbite happens in three stages:

- 1 Skin is deeply cold and painful
 - This is the warning stage; it's telling you to warm up now, or you will lose your fingers and toes
 - Damage to skin isn't permanent yet
- 2 Skin is warm and feels like pins and needles
 - Ice crystals are starting to form in the top layers of skin
 - Warm skin tells you the skin is dying
- 3 Skin is Numb
 - Ice crystals are now in the deep layers of skin
 - Muscles near the damaged skin can stop working
 - The skin is dead and will become hard and black

How to treat frostbite:

- Get inside to a warm place as soon as possible
- Take off any wet clothing
- Cover the person or area in warm blankets
- Soak the damaged area in warm water – but not hot – until normal skin color returns, but for no more than 30 minutes
- Warm the affected area using body heat.
- Don't massage damaged skin. This can cause more damage.
- Avoid direct heat such as hot water or hot air from a fire
- Don't walk on frostbitten feet or toes because it can cause more damage
